

50 Wonderful Songs about Love, Family and Adoption

There is simply nothing like music to connect people to one another, or to raise a down mood! Who doesn't tap a beat on the steering wheel when driving a long distance? Or start singing along with the current top hit or a favorite oldie? Your wedding was accompanied by a special love song. You sing your child to sleep with a favorite lullaby. Even picking up toys is done to the Barney "Clean Up" song. The iPod rage is another indicator of the pleasure millions of Americans receive from music.

But, did you also know... that,

Music - Just in Time for the Holidays!

- Music helps develop brain areas involved in language and reasoning
- There is a link between music and spatial intelligence—the ability to visually and mentally picture things. This is a type of intelligence used in math and solving problems. For example, researchers found that children given piano lessons significantly improved in their spatial-reasoning scores compared to children who received computer lessons, or no piano lessons (Rauscher, Shaw, Levine, Wright, Dennis, & Newcomb, 1997).
- Music is part of the arts. Arts promote creativity.
- Music provides a means of self-expression.
- Performing to an audience in a concert or chorus helps kids conquer fears. They learn that anxiety can be overcome.
- Information from the National Education Longitudinal Study showed that music students received more academic honors and awards than non-music students (Ingels, 1992.)
- Students with coursework or experience in music performance or music appreciation scored higher on the SAT (College Entrance Examination Board, 2001).
- "The musician must make decisions about tempo, tone, style, rhythm, etc. This makes the brain become incredibly good at organizing and conducting numerous activities. This has a great payoff for lifelong attentional skills (Ratey, 2001).
- Singing, chanting and rhythmic play can increase your child's vocabulary, improve coordination, enhance self-esteem, contribute to emotional regulation and reduce stress (Campbell, 2002).
- Rhythm is essential. The brain's rhythm-keeping regions, when not functioning properly, are often causes of depression and other psychiatric disorders. These regions are also in charge of regulating sleep, and this is likely why sleep problems are seen in children with mental health issues. Regulating heart rate and the release of stress hormones require the brain to keep proper rhythm as well (Perry & Szalavitz, 2006).

The short video, "The Case for Music Education" is worth the few minutes it takes to watch if you want to see more benefits—

In therapy, I connect my iPod to a speaker. I find that even the most difficult children will settle down and gaze intently into their parents' eyes during songs about family, love and adoption. So, in addition to all the benefits listed above, I find music a most powerful source of forging attachments between parents and their children.

Below, I am listing many of the songs I find beneficial to strengthen attachments. These songs are also those most liked by my clients (the kids and the parents). I'm giving you the name of the song, the artist and the album. On the right, in the "Readings and Resources", I give you links to each of the albums which also include the MP3 download information. If you're an iPod user, you already know how to find iTunes!
